

How to Choose a Banquet Center for Your Wedding Reception

Actually, choosing the wedding reception site that is just right for you is a lot of fun. Before you start looking, you should brainstorm. As you do, take into consideration your budget, your wedding theme, the atmosphere you want at your reception, your interests and your guests.

The location is one of the most important aspects of your wedding reception, so consider carefully what will make yours a special, one-of-a-kind event.

We recommend that if possible, both bride and groom attend all appointments at McMenamy's. Always carry a note pad and pen to write down important information and questions that may arise during your meeting.

What to expect of the representative of the facility:

- A business card the person you may work with within the facility.
- A brochure that explains what is offered and any other additional information.
- References (verbal is acceptable)
- A tour of the facility so you may check its amenities.

Questions for the representative of the facility:

- Is there ample free parking close by?
- How long have you been accommodating wedding parties?
- How many wedding clients have you served?
- Do you have an inhouse wedding coordinator?
- Can you recommend wedding vendors and service providers your customers had a good experience with?
- What additional expenses may be charged?
- How much and by when will we need to put down the deposit?
- What is the latest time frame for making changes?
- Will you provide us with a written contract?
- Is there a cancellation clause?

Once you made your choice, you need to receive a written contract signed by the person in charge, and dated. The contract must include all of your responsibilities and all of the responsibilities, warranties and guarantees offered by the facility. Read each contract very carefully. Be sure that you understand it fully and agree with all the terms. If you have questions, concerns, or are uncertain, contact us for clarification.
